Once again, here are the heroines of everyday life!

Their music: dense, precise, their beats driving at times, beating hard on the pulse of postmodernism. They put red meat on the bones. BLOOD for Les Reines Prochaines is not the blood of bloodshed or war, but of life itself—heart's blood, hot blood, menstrual blood, the bloody tears of the Holy Mother of God, blood sausage, and red hot. Blood—the thick warm deep syrup of life.

21 tracks, songs and sound poems from LRP's last live programs. Songs written by life itself, ballads—bold and light, tableaux full of sumptuous tales. Songs for the serious, songs for the silly, served up by five exciting lead voices, a playful rhythm section, juicy brass riffs and heavenly refrains.

LRP's taste goes to a minimalist, unpolished sound, pop, punk, chanson and folk. Everything they've ever heard and been touched by goes into it, making for stylistic nuances that combine tango, cabaret, Balkan beat, mariachi, piano lounge, klezmer and Brecht-Weil.

The lyrics are in German, English and Spanish. Each song an individual work sung by one of the queens, songs as different as the temperaments of their composers.

There is the tale-telling Fränzi Madörin with „Kreisel sind rund“ (Roundabouts are Round), in which she praises the roundabout as the ideal model for decision making, preventive hygiene and a source of income for impoverished artists: „For nobody don't go driving in order not to see any art“.

In „Ach was würde ich gerne“ (Ah, What Would I Like), Madörin betrays her little domestic surgical urges, replete with sensual horror.

„Spoil me“ is a love song by Michèle Fuchs about breakfast after a night of love, indulged in no less passionately than the night before. Fuchs also treats us to the tragic tale of „Takime“ from the Nonsense Mountains, swinging between Alpine idyll and fantasia in the style of Struwwelpeter.

In „Verena die hat Pläne“ (Verena She Has Plans), Sus Zwick gently intones a melancholic song, enjoying meagre results after a long string of failures and delighting in the sock she just knitted. In „Alter Ego“, Zwick takes up the absurd game of the figure that has emancipated itself from the original, from its artistic creator, to discover a life of its own.

Muda Mathis sings „Shila's“ bizarre transformation into the god Shiva. In „Identität“ (Identity) she convincingly unravels this complex subject, hard on the pulse of present-day discourse. The song „Virus“, sung by Barbara Naegelin, involves cannibalistic seduction and lust as a ribald dance between mortal fear and sex.

The 17 songs and 4 sound poems were recorded by Les Reines Prochaines together with the drummer and producer David Kerman in their legendary studios, VIA, AudioVideoKunst, in Basel, which they have been running for 25 years with their artist friends.

The release of the „Blut“ album is accompanied by the 77-minute documentary film „Les Reines Prochaines“ by Claudia Willke, produced by Stella Händler. The Hamburg filmmaker followed LRP for over three years and shows how they keep breaking down the barriers between music, theatre, visual art and film and recombining them with wit, imagination and radical cheek.

About the band

Les Reines Prochaines have been around for 25 years. Their approach is process-oriented, associative and conceptual. Authorial work and group cooperation complete each other and flow naturally into a product.

Musically and physically, LRP buzz their through the Western performance tradition and dance uninhibitedly at every imaginable party. They are as much at home in Rock & Roll as in the theatre and art gallery. Their public includes the Queer and the Straight as much as young squatters and rightful house owners.
